Methodology and materials

To answer this question, I will need to...

In particular, ask yourself the following questions:

1. Is your investigation doable within the timeframe and in 4000 words?
2. Is the research question significant? Why is it significant? For whom does this this topic and this research matter?
3. Can you get all the evidence you need? How? Can you get the materials and equipment, can you do the experiments? Can you contact the people and get the information you need? What other resources do you still need?
4. Have you already read and marked an EE from a former student in your subject area? Have you checked the Choice of Topic and Treatment of the Topic sections of the EE Guide for your subject, to ensure it meets requirements?
5. If you have doubts about any of these, you may need to refine or change your research question. Discuss your doubts with your supervisor in your 1st RPPF session.
