Conceptual understanding

Audience

language should be appropriate for the person(s) with whom one is communicating

Context

language should be appropriate to the situation in which one is communicating

Purpose

language should be appropriate to achieve a desired intention, goal or result when communicating

Meaning

language is used in a range of ways to communicate a message

Variation

Differences exist within a given language, and that speakers of a given language are generally able to understand each other

A very important aspect of the Ab Initio course is adapting language to context, audience, purpose

This happens in Language B and even Language and Literature
